LOCAL ARTIST TALKS TO KIWANIS MEMBERS

Myron Insko was chairman of Kiwanis luncheon program Wednesday with Dr. F. R. Felt presiding.

Miss Jean Rittenhouse, local portrait artist and long time a resident of Ocean Beach, was guest speaker, telling of some of her work at the Exposition during the past summer and the trend of the profession. She deplored the modernistic trend in "muddy" color effects, the distorted figures and the general ugliness of many paintings of the last few years. It was her opinion that this type of work would not be lasting and the sooner it was thrown in the discard the better.

The majority of those present were in hearty accord with Miss Rittenhouse in her wish that only the lovely and beautiful things be brought out as the major features of an artistic display.

The speaker ended her talk with a plea that our citizens arouse themselves to an interest in saving some of the better buildings and especially the Globe theatre at the Exposition grounds. The Expo management having already acceded to a public wish that the Spanish Village be made a permanent setting in Balboa park.

Miss Rittenhouse, though following the vocation of an artist on her first visit to Ocean Beach more than twenty years ago, became so enthralled with the natural beauty of the setting here, that she invested in real estate and followed that line for a number of years.

The local Kiwanis club at its meeting this week voted to again furnished milk each day for undernourished children at Ocean Beach elementary school if same is needed and also decided to donate to Point Loma high school, a tackling dummy at cost of $13.00, for the school's football squad.

Mrs. Mary Varney, program chairman for the day, turned back the calendar twelve years to honor the charter members and new members of the club. Preceeded by Betty Schumacher (first baby of the club) who carried a basket of flowers the charter members marched into the club rooms, accompanied to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne" sung by the trio, and were presented with corsages. Mrs. Varney introduced the charter members present as follows: Miss Spani, Miss Jean Rittenhouse, Mrs. Katherine Rigg. Mrs. Amy Cunningham, Mrs. John Clark, Mrs. Edith Reich, Mrs. Charles May, Mrs. Ona Feigley, Mrs. Carrie Borcherdt, Mrs. Julia T. McGarvey. Honor guests were Mrs. David Fraser, state chairman of American homes, who spoke at the organization meeting of the club in November 1924, and Mrs. Edward Cressell of Olivewood club, who was the secretary of the club which existed at the beach long before the Ocean Beach Women's club was organized.

The charter members spoke briefly of the earlier days at the beach. Mrs. Cressell spoke of the work done by the first club which was organized primarily to secure sewerage for the beach, and how it took about 50 women besieging the council chambers for over a year before they finally obtained results.

Mrs. McGarvey spoke of the early purposes of the organization and the inspiration brought to it by Miss Roberta Winans (now Mrs. Ireland) from federation meetings.

Members stood with bowed heads a moment in remembrance of Mrs. Sarah Sweeney, first temporary chairman of the club.

Mrs. David Fraser, speaker for the day told the familiar story of Sorosis; of the women in the little Kansas town who worked so hard to purchase a rug and then had to rent a room and sit on the precious red velvet rug to prevent it becoming the property of the men's organization; she also told of the general federation which was attended by Phoebe Hearst, Julia Ward Howe and other famous names, and of traveling libraries that were the forerunners of the county libraries and many other interesting works done by the women's clubs in the early days.

Mrs. Fraser, as chairman of American home, told briefly of the work being done to back child labor laws, for industrialization at Tehachapi and to better living conditions at the State Industrial home for the Blind at Oakland. In the Federation News, Mrs. Fraser will have an article on the various educational projects to be fostered by the American home department, such as practical work for peace, with the slogan "Drop Toy Guns For Bench Tools" as gifts to children. Refuse to buy toys that depict crime or war.

Mrs. Mary Varney, assisted by Mrs. Ella Smith and Mrs. E. Stivers, sr., served as hostesses for this lovely meeting and presided during th tea hour. The clubhouse was decorated beautifully with seasonal flowers. Four new members were taken into the club.

The evening study department will meet with Mrs. McGarvey, 4824 Coronado avenue, Monday evening September 28 at 7:30 p. m.

The first meeting of the morning study group, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Don Horner, will meet at the club rooms Tuesday morning October 6 at 10:30 a. m. this will be in the form of a civic forum, and all interested members are urged to attend this first meeting.

Mrs. Elizabeth Finley, chairman of Americanization will be chairman for the next regular meeting of the club to be held October 8.

Veterans Have Faith In President Roosevelt

Some people feel that our veterans will not support President Roosevelt in the November election but the views of a few expressed thru their letters to Time magazine we believe are worth your attention and they are as follows:

"Personally, I would walk on my hands & knees from Memphis to Washington, D. C., just for the opportunity of making known, in my very limited way, my admiration, adoration, and adherence to the policies of the World's Greatest Human Being — Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

FRAYSER HINTON
Former Capt. 42nd (Rainbow) Division Memphis, Tenn.

Sirs:

Gerold Wichmann says in TIME, Aug. 31, that the Veterans hate President Roosevelt. Perhaps some of them do. Here is one Veteran who does not and I am sure there are thousands of others.

Sure Roosevelt vetoed the Bonus bill and my Congressman voted against it. But I mean to vote for that same Congressman on Sept. 9 and for Mr. Roosevelt in November. . . . .

Instead of disliking F. D. R. I love him and feel that he should be loved and honored by every man, woman and child in America.

C. O. BROOKSHIRE
Demorest, Ga.

Sirs:

Mr. Gerold Wichmann, in TIME, quotes Legion National Commander Johnson as follows: "The Bonus is not an issue" He adds that the two vetoes are. Why stop at two? We have the Harding, Coolidge and Hoover vetoes. . . . .

Blackest page of all came with Hoover's eviction of the Bonus Marchers, wives and children, by gas and bayonet. Contrast that with the friendly reception accorded by Roosevelt and you will see some reason for the vet's leaning toward Democracy.

OPENS TODAY

A discussion group in current affairs and trends which is arousing a great deal of interest with Ocean Beach women opens today in the bungalow of the Ocean Beach school at 1:30. Women interested are invited.

Local People Home From European Trip

Mrs. A. R. Claspill of San Diego and grandson Jim Claspill of Ocean Beach returned Thursday of last week from their three months trip to the east coast and on tour of European countries.

The travelers left by auto and went first to Denver, Colorado, where they spent a week, then to Springfield, Ill., for several days, then to New York City where they were sight seeing before sailing for Plymouth, England. At New York a student tour of thirty people was joined and upon arrival across the Atlantic at Plymouth an 11-hour train ride took the party to London where six days were spent visiting historic and interesting places. Here they went by motor to Stratford, Oxford and outstanding cities.

Leaving England they crossed the English channel to Holland where they stayed at Hague, then to Belgium and on to Colonge, Germany and took a boat trip up the Rhine to Mayence; from there to Heidelberg, Berlin, Dresden and to Prague, Czechoslovakia; Budapest in Hungary; to Austria and back into Munich, Germany; then to Lucerne and Interlocken in Switzerland; and Italy, Monte Carlo and France, seeing a good deal of Venice, Florence, Rome, Naples, Sorrento, Genoa and the Isle of Capri, Nice and Paris.

Returning to New York City the Claspills went to Washington, then motored down to Tuscaloosa, Ala., to highway 80 and came west to Dallas where a day was spent at the Texas Centennial Exposition, after which came California and home.

Student tours this summer had more than 1,000 students on the schedules to Europe and no doubt our young folks will have a much better general idea of the foreign countries after making this educational trip. The regimentation or marching of young folks and children to and from school were especially noticeable in some of the countries visited and were claimed as a great benefit to the populace as a builder of health.

In our country crop conditions thru Illinois and Pennsylvania were said to be good but the southern states had very poor corn crops and generally looked in only fair condition.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

REVISING the 1937 budget figures he submitted to congress in January, President Roosevelt now estimates that expenditures caused by the bonus and the AAA invalidation will put the public debt at the all-time high figure of $34,188,543,494. He says, however, that better business will run tax receipts up $12,000,000 higher than was expected. The President's revision covered the fiscal year that began July 1 last and will end June 30, 1937. During his absence from the capital it was issued by Acting Budget Director Daniel W. Bell.

President Roosevelt

The chief items changed by the estimate were:

1. Receipts, fixed at $5,665,839,000.
2. Expenditures at $7,762,835,300.
3. Gross deficit for the year at $2,096,996,300.
4. Public debt on June 30, 1937, at $34,188,543,493.73.

These estimates compared with January figures as follows:

1. Receipts of $5,654,217,650.
2. Expenditures of $7,645,301,338.
3. Deficit of $1,098,388,720.
4. Public debt at end of year of $31,351,638,737.

The $2,000,000,000 deficit Mr. Roosevelt estimated is the lowest of the New Deal. Regarding this figure the President said:

"The estimated deficit for 1937 is $2,096,996,300 which includes $580,000,000 for statutory debt retirement and $560,000,000 for further payments under the adjusted compensation payment act.

"Deducting the amount of the statutory debt retirement leaves a net deficit of $1,516,996,300.

"This does not mean that there will be an increase in the public debt of this amount for the reason that it is contemplated during the year to reduce the working balance of the general fund by approximately $1,100,000,000."

What Mr. Roosevelt meant by this was that instead of borrowing money to cover the difference between receipts and expenditures, the Treasury would dip into the general fund for $1,100,000,000.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT and Alf M. Landon, rival candidates for the presidency, met in Des Moines, Iowa, in their respective capacities of President of the United States and governor of Kansas, and discussed the problem of relief for the drouth sufferers and prevention of future drouths. With them were the governors of other midwestern states. Governor Landon was prepared to offer for consideration the program for long distance drouth relief which he submitted to Harry L. Hopkins, WPA administrator, during the more serious drouth of 1934. It was said to resemble in many particulars the plan the President has been advocating in recent speeches and is a joint federal-state program.

Just before the Des Moines conference got under way there were heavy rainfalls in Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma which weather forecasters thought were "the beginning of the end of the drouth."

FRANCIS B. SAYRE, assistant secretary of state in charge of reciprocal trade agreements, has returned from a six weeks' tour of Europe, and the department has begun a drive to expand that favorite program of Secretary Hull. Fourteen of those agreements already have been signed, and a survey is being made of other nations with which trade pacts may be concluded. During the next fiscal year negotiations will be opened with as many as possible and officials said as many as a dozen new treaties may result. Ten months remain before the power given the President by congress to negotiate such pacts expires.

F. B. Sayre

Officials declined to specify which nations may be approached on possible trade pacts until the study of trade and trade trends between the United States and other nations gives an indication of which might prove most profitable.

IT WAS Benito Mussolini's turn to go into the European version of the Indian war dance, following Hitler and Stalin, and he gave a great performance. At Avellino, center of the Italian army maneuvers, Il Duce announced to a cheering throng that he could mobilize 8,000,000 soldiers, "in the course of a few hours and after a simple order." The premier declared the world is in the throes of an irresistible re-armament race and Italy must reject the idea of eternal peace, which he said is "foreign to our creed and to our temperament." He asserted that the armed forces of Italy are more efficient than ever as a consequence of the Ethiopian war and that the 60,000 men engaged in the maneuvers are but a modest and almost insignificant part of the country's actual war strength.

"We must be strong," cried Mussolini. "We must be always stronger! We must be so strong that we can face any eventualities and look directly in the eye whatever may befall!"

Germany's new army of a million men, created by Hitler's order doubling the term of compulsory military training, is to be financed by increased taxes on all companies and corporations by 25 per cent for 1936 and by 50 per cent for 1937. This increase brings the corporations tax up to a minimum of 25 and 30 per cent on new profits.

JAPAN proposes to build up a submarine fleet approximately 30 per cent larger than that of either Great Britain or the United States. Such was the substance of a note delivered by the Japanese embassy in London to the British foreign office. The decision replaces the submarine parity among the three powers established by the 1930 London naval treaty.

Japan notified Great Britain that it was determined to keep afloat 11,059 tons of destroyers and 15,598 tons of submarines above the 1930 London treaty quotas. This tonnage, if the treaty's provisions were carried out, would be scrapped at the end of this year.

The Japanese note was in reply to Great Britain's memorandum of July 15, 1936, invoking the "escape clause" of the first London treaty in order to increase its destroyer tonnage above the pact's allowance.

Japan gave the lack of sufficient excess destroyers as its reason for retaining a surplus in submarines.

The United States, like Great Britain, has decided it must keep in service after the end of the year 40,000 tons of over age destroyers in excess of the total permitted by the 1930 treaty.

SHOULD war break out in Europe, France counts on having the powerful Polish army on her side. Consequently the week long visit of Gen. Edward Rydz-Smigly, inspector general of that army, and a Polish military mission to France was made the occasion of elaborate ceremonies. The train carrying the Poles crossed the border at Belfort and there General Rydz-Smigly was received by the commanding generals of the area and reviewed thousands of troops of the frontier regiments. Going thence to Paris, the Poles were accorded the highest military honors and the crowds in the decorated streets cheered them lustily.

Gen. Rydz-Smigly.

Dinners for the guests were given by President Albert Lebrun, Premier Leon Blum and Foreign Minister Delbos. Later they were taken to the Franco-German frontier where they inspected the famous Maginot defense line of concrete and steel strongholds and passages.

IN AN appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States the Virginian Railway company made an attack on the provisions of the railway labor act authorizing collective bargaining between representatives of the employees and the carriers.

The railroad appealed from rulings by the Eastern Virginia Federal District court and the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals requiring it to negotiate concerning disputes with a unit of the American Federation of Labor. It contended the legislation, passed in 1926 and amended in 1934, violated the Constitution by depriving it of liberty and property, and attempting to regulate labor relations with employees engaged solely in intrastate activities.

BECAUSE labor costs in New York city are too high, the Charles Schweinler Press, largest magazine printing house there, has decided to close the plant in which it employs 1,000 men and women and move where costs are lower. Executives of the company said they did not object to the wage scales imposed by New York unions, but found the differential between the local scale and the rates in force elsewhere so great that it was "impossible" to continue in New York.

When the Schweinler Press moves it will take with it an annual pay roll of $1,750,000. Publishers of the seventy magazines printed by the company have been notified of the impending closing. Among them are The Literary Digest and The Nation.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY L. C. GARNETT of Washington was asked by Vice President Garner to present to the federal grand jury the case of six Railway Audit and Inspection company officials who failed to appear before a senate committee some two weeks ago. Those cited by Mr. Garner were: W. W. Groves, president of the company; W. B. Groves, vice president; Earl Douglas Rice, vice president; J. E. Blair, secretary-treasurer; R. S. Judge, director, and J. C. Boyer.

The committee, headed by Senator La Follette, is investigating the alleged use of labor "spies" by employers in disputes with their employees. At the time of the hearing an attorney for the company told the committee an injunction was being sought in federal court to prevent the officials' appearance and to prohibit production of their records.

MRS. RUTH BRYAN OWEN, now the wife of Capt. Boerge Rohde of the Danish king's royal life guards, has resigned as American minister to Denmark in order to be free to campaign as a private citizen for the re-election of President Roosevelt, and the President has accepted her resignation. This was done in an exchange of telegrams, that from Mr. Roosevelt saying:

Ruth Owen.

"While I am very loath to have you discontinue the very fine services you have been rendering as United States minister to Denmark, I appreciate your reasons for wanting to resign and the motives that prompt you. I therefore reluctantly accept your resignation."

Mrs. Rohde, daughter of William Jennings Bryan, has had a long career of public service. Before entering the diplomatic service she served in the Seventy-first and Seventy-second congresses, 1929 to 1933, from Florida. Captain Rohde, to whom she was married in July last, is her third husband.

SIX bombs dropped from an unidentified Spanish airplane fell perilously near the American destroyer Kane, which was en route from Gibraltar to Bilbao to help in the removal of Americans from the war zone. The Kane fired several rounds from an anti-aircraft gun at the plane. Naturally our government was roused to protest. Secretary of State Hull instructed his agents abroad to request both the Spanish government and Gen. Francisco Franco, leader of the rebel forces, to "issue instructions in the strongest terms" to prevent another "incident of this character."

The rebel forces in the north were making a powerful air attack on Irun, scattering many bombs on that border city, and an assault by land and sea forces was expected at any moment. The government troops there had refused to surrender and their officers said rightist prisoners, including some prominent men, would be exposed in the most open places during the bombardment.

The Madrid government admitted its troops had sustained an "important reverse" in a battle at Oropesa, 100 miles southwest of the capital and were driven back to Talavera. Later a loyalist victory at that place was claimed, though London heard the rebels had scored another victory there. The fighting in the Guadarrama mountains continued indecisively.

RESOLUTIONS adopted by the American Bar association at its meeting in Boston declare firmly against any attempt to limit the power of federal courts to pass on the constitutionality of laws. The association avoided what had been expected to be a lively debate by taking a noncommittal attitude on the report of another committee which denounced in great part the alleged invasion of the rights of citizens by the New Deal. This report, to which there was a minority report appended, was received and filed by the assembly, but not accepted, and the committee which filed it was discharged from further duty.

Frederick H. Stinchfield of Minneapolis was unanimously elected president of the association.

PERHAPS the farmers of America don't realize it, but during July they enjoyed the largest cash income they have had since 1929. Figures given out by the Department of Agriculture show the sales of farm products brought them $711,000,000 against $582,000,000 in June and only $451,000,000 in July, 1935.

To their income from sales, the farmers added $24,000,000 in various forms of government benefits, bringing the total cash at their disposal to $735,000,000. The rental and other benefits totaled $57,000,000 in June and $19,000,000 in July, 1935.

"The sharp increase in cash farm income in July was mainly due to the pronounced gain in income from grains, chiefly wheat," the report said. "Receipts of wheat in the principal markets in July were the fourth largest for the month on record, despite the relatively small supplies on farms this year.

"Prices of meat animals in July, while averaging slightly lower than in June, were nevertheless higher than in July, 1935, so that income from meat animals was considerably higher than a year ago. Cash income from dairy products increased more than seasonally."

PACIFIC OCEAN

THOSE who trek through strange lands and into far places, come sooner or later to the realization that after all is said and done and seen, the world is small indeed. When one least expects it, time and space are annihilated

Out of East Hampton, L. I., travels William C. Hall for a month's stay in Peiping, China, with which he became so fascinated that nothing would do but to lease a snugly furnished, servanted and properly equipped cottage on Rue de Lagrene, French legation quarter, shortest street in the ancient capital, a thoroughfare so abbreviated that only three houses could find space to park there.

Mystery of the Two Halls.

"To facilitate the delivery of my mail," said Mr. Hall, "I had a small name plate made for the front gate. Imagine my surprise to discover the next day that at the other end of Rue de Lagrene, my own residence being No. 1, another William C. Hall had his name up on house No. 3. At all events, that same afternoon in the Peiping club I met a William C. Hall, captain of the marine corps, a resident of China for many years. It was as much a shock to him when he saw my name as it was to me when I saw his. Startling, wasn't it? And hard to match."

"I wouldn't say that," said Mrs. Hall, occupying the next steamer chair. "Recently, while dining with a mixed company, a gentleman whom I had never met before told a story that had to do with the making of a mint julep in Louisville, Ky. As the narrative unfolded and, recognizing it as having happened to my father, I took occasion to say so.

"Rather stiffly, and in a doubting mood, the teller advised me that he had been assured by the lady that it had happened to her father, Crittendon Collings. In further support, and with evident high esteem for minute particulars, he advised me that the source of his information was a Mrs. Hollingsworth Siter.

Survivor of the Titanic.

"Of course, you know," continued Mrs. Hall, "that there was nothing I could do other than to inform the gentleman that I happen to be a sister to Mrs. Siter."

A married couple, whose courtship began in Japan, went back in their story to the sinking of the Titanic, a disaster of such proportions that the news was circulated into the uttermost corners of the earth. A young woman, spending a few days at Miyanoshita, learned through an English newspaper on file there that a Mrs. Stone, an old friend, was among the rescued, a piece of good news, calling for a letter of congratulation. At the hotel desk, while buying postage stamps, she remarked to her mother that Mrs. Stone's American address had slipped her mind. "If, by any coincidence," said a woman standing near, "it is Mrs. George W. Stone of Cincinnati, to whom you refer, here is her address on a letter I have just written."

Henry George's Daughters.

As a result of that remarkably fortuitous circumstance, a friendship was formed which brought the travelers together, and the son of the woman who supplied the address became the husband of the girl who had forgotten it.

The foregoing three episodes, interesting indeed, would seem to have been ample out of one passenger list, but the fourth into which I found myself drawn was even more remarkable in that it carried a double dose of fortuity. Believe it or not, here it is: An Austin P. Sutter of Los Angeles, associated with the moving picture industry, told of a Tokio acquaintance who, taken to the Tokio Imperial hospital suffering from heart trouble, was restored by the use of a preparation invented in the United States.

The conversation on this subject, interrupted by something more entertaining, ended there. Two or three days later, off Honolulu, the film man and I went into a huddle on the screen industry and mutual friends connected with it. In the course of our prattle Sutter spoke of Cecil DeMille. Did I know him? Yes, but I knew his brother, Billy DeMille, better; saw a good deal of him 25 years ago in New York, where he married one of the daughters of Henry George, author of "Progress and Poverty." Right there something clicked.

"Another daughter of the great philosopher," I went on, "married a Japanese physician, who became world famous as the discoverer of a formula to stimulate heart action, since adopted universally."

"What was his name?" asked Sutter, suddenly aroused.

"Takamine. Johichi Takamine. The preparation is known as Adrenalin."

CROWN OF THORNS

DOUBTS of the identity of the leading presidential candidates so thoroughly dispelled early in 1936, sometimes have held on to the midst of the conventions.

So it was that the Democratic gathering of 1896 provided a tremendous upset, giving the party William Jennings Bryan, a leader who literally was to wear a "crown of thorns" through three unsuccessful campaigns.

No less than 13 candidates for the Democratic nomination were regarded seriously in 1896 and the usual stableful of dark horses was present.

"Pitchfork Ben" Tillman of South Carolina, whose hat was definitely in the ring, prodded the delegates unmercifully and the wordy battles from the platform spread to one fist fight after another on the floor. Then Bryan was recognized.

"We are fighting in defense of our homes, our families, and posterity," he declaimed. "We have petitioned and our petitions have been scorned. We have entreated and our entreaties have been disregarded. We have begged and they have mocked us when our calamity came. We beg no more, we entreat no longer, we petition no more—we defy them!"

His remarks were on the financial plank of the Democratic platform and Bryan fired them directly at the delegation from New York. Then he closed with the defiance which still rings down the corridors of time: "You shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns, you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold."

He "stopped the show." The delegates went wild. When the business of the convention could be resumed the day following, Bryan was nominated.

His defeat by McKinley, two succeeding failures for the presidency, in truth settled a crown of thorns upon the brow of Bryan which he was doomed to wear until the last public act of his life—participation in the famous "monkey" trial down in Dayton, Tennessee. He held, and he swayed, multitudes with the power of his oratory, but on election day he could not mark their ballots for them.

THE FIRST PLATFORM

ONE of the essentials of a modern political convention is the adoption of a "platform" upon which the Presidential nominee is to "take his stand" during the campaign. Whether or not he stays on it is quite another matter but few candidates would think of going before the "peepul" without one.

The first platform appeared during the campaign of 1840. In that year the Democrats, holding their convention in Baltimore, set forth what they considered the fundamental principles of their party. Asserting that the federal government was one of strictly limited powers and that all grants not expressly made to it were reserved to the states, this platform

Declared against the assumption of state debts, contracted for local improvements, by the federal government.

Denied the power of the federal government to foster one industry, or section, to the detriment of another.

Asserted that the federal government exceeded its authority when it raised more revenue than was required to defray the ordinary expenses of administration.

Denied the power of congress to interfere with or control the institution of slavery.

Declared against the handling of public funds by private banks.

Denounced restrictions upon the privileges of citizenship and of ownership of land with respect to foreign immigrants.

They then unanimously renominated Martin Van Buren for the presidency and got ready to fight the battle of ballots along the lines of policy they had laid down. But if they expected their opponents to meet them on that ground they were grievously disappointed. The Whigs not only failed to adopt a platform but they failed to put forth any statement of principles for the very good reason that they didn't have any. They disregarded issues entirely and launched their whirlwind "Tippecanoe and Tyler, Too!" campaign.

Secretary of the Treasury

In 1789 congress enacted a law providing that the secretary of the treasury may not engage in trade or business, own steamships or otherwise be active in profit-making enterprises during his incumbency. He is liable, on conviction, to a $3,000 fine, dismissal and may never thereafter hold office under the federal government. The same provisions apply to the treasurer of the United States and the register of the treasury.

Yards of Rain

Inches are inadequate in measuring recent rainfall in Northern Queensland, Australia. Tully reports 7 feet of rain in 10 weeks. Innisfall and Babinda had more than 6 feet and they were run close by several other towns. Mackey could report only one and one half yards, but its total rainfall, if up to the average, should measure enough to float a battleship.

SYNOPSIS

Sleepy Cat, desert town of the Southwest, is celebrating the Fourth of July. Jane Van Tambel, beautiful daughter of Gus Van Tambel, hated owner of Gunlock ranch, has arrived from the East for the first time. She watches the Frontier Day celebration in company with Dr. Carpy, crusty, tender-hearted friend of the community. Henry Sawdy of the Circle Dot ranch, tricked in a fake horse race the day before by Dave McCrossen, foreman at Gunlock, plans revenge. He enters Bill Denison, a handsome young Texas wrangler, in the rodeo which McCrossen is favored to win, and lays heavy bets on him. Unknown to the crowd, Denison is a champion horseman McCrossen and the young stranger tie in the various events. McCrossen picks up a handkerchief from the ground riding full speed, facing backward. Denison easily follows suit. Denison then drops a cigarette carelessly. Racing down the track full tilt, he picks up the cigarette. The verdict goes to Denison when McCrossen refuses to attempt the stunt. Entreated by the crowd, Denison agrees to perform another trick. Jane Van Tambel is asked for her bracelet and throws it on the track. Just as Denison rides to pick it up a yell from Barney Rebstock, a McCrossen henchman, scares the pony, nearly costing the rider his life. Gun play is prevented by the intervention of Dr. Carpy.

CHAPTER II—Continued

He had the crowd with him. While they cheered, the wrangler remounted, cantered leisurely up the track and down, and brought the gelding to a halt in front of Dr. Carpy and Jane Van Tambel. Patting the pony affectionately on the neck with his left hand, and speaking softly, the wrangler tapped the little fellow with his doubled quirt on the right shoulder.

The pony pawed the dust in protest but gradually crooked his right foreleg, then his left, and knelt in apology to the grandstand. The crowd gave him loud applause.

Meantime, throwing his lines, the wrangler stepped off the pony, laid his hand on the guard rails of the grandstand track-fence, cleared it, and, picking his way among the spectators up to where Carpy sat, stopped before Jane.

He was covered with dust and sweat. Jane started. She saw a pair of keen brown eyes inspecting her from behind long dusty lashes. She saw a familiar object in his right hand, as he held it out to her and heard his low words:

"Lady, your bracelet!"

"Oh!" exclaimed Jane completely surprised. "Th-thank you!"

"It's the other way round, please," retorted the wrangler. "I want to thank you. Sorry," he stammered, "for the disturbance."

He tried to fade away among his boisterous following of uproarious Circle Dot men. But not everyone was disposed to let him escape easily. Harry Tenison, who paid the stake money over to Sawdy at the Circle Dot quarters, insisted on meeting the Texan. He was dragged, reluctant, out of the sleeping tent and shook hands slowly with the Medicine Bend sport magnate.

"Where did you pick up that cigarette trick?" demanded Tenison. "I never saw it done but once. That was at Madison Square Garden."

"How long ago?" asked the wrangler.

"Two years ago last winter."

"It was done there that winter, I understand," said the Texan evenly. "Of course, it was under artificial light, so they had to use white paper."

"You been in New York, then?"

"Once or twice, sir."

"You've seen it done, then?"

"I have, sir. And I'm mighty glad I met you," drawled the Texan, cutting the interview short. He was not ungracious, but was somewhat fatigued.

"The boy can ride," said Tenison, rejoining Sawdy. "I told him I saw that cigarette act done in Madison Square Garden, two years ago. He said he saw it at the same time. I guess that's where he picked it up."

"Picked what up, the cigarette?"

"The act. He said they used a white-paper cigarette there on account of the artificial light—so he must have seen it."

"Who's they?" asked Sawdy bluntly.

"I suppose he meant the rider."

"I wonder if he meant himself. Why, Harry, he's the man that introduced that act at the Garden, two years ago last winter."

CHAPTER III

Two years later, back on her old father's ranch after two years in Chicago, Jane was riding the possessions one day to be hers. Wandering on her pony far in the Gunlock hills, she had lost her way toward the close of the day and had stopped to ask directions from a man standing at the door of a poor-looking cabin.

"Why, isn't this Gunlock Ranch?"

"Not yet." The man answered the question firmly, Jane thought.

"When I left the house this morning," she said indignantly, "they told me I could ride all day without getting off Gunlock Ranch. I must have ridden about a hundred miles. What did you mean by saying, 'not yet'? she asked suspiciously.

Bill Denison, before whose door she had halted, looked at Jane with curiosity. "Oh, nothing special," he said casually. "Only, that old man Van Tambel has stolen everything in the hills except this ranch. I hear he's pretty sick now—down at the Medicine Bend hospital—but who can tell that he won't show up some fine night and steal this place while I'm asleep?"

At this outburst Jane first stopped breathing—then she breathed furiously. Her features hardened. "Why, how outrageous!" she exclaimed. "You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

The young man held his ground. "Let me ask a question. Are you any kin of old man Van Tambel's?" he asked composedly.

"I don't care to discuss that question with you," was her defiant reply.

"I admit, if you are, I was kind of rough, speaking as I did," he went on. "I didn't know he had any relations. I worked for him a year once, and I never heard him tell of any. So I guess I have to apologize."

"I should think you would apologize," declared Jane, scandalized.

"But," he countered, and the "but" was emphatic, "to tell you the truth, lady, I can't take everything back. You living over at the ranch?" he asked.

"I live in Chicago." She bit off the words as if they were tenpenny nails.

"And you're lost?"

"If I were not, I shouldn't be here."

"Now no matter how you and I may differ on some subjects," he said, "I'll start you on your way home, providing you want me to. In fact, I'll do it anyway."

"Will you wait a minute while I saddle up?"

"I won't wait a second. I'll find my own way." So saying, Jane jerked her horse around.

"Well, I like your spunk, anyway," Denison called out to her, "and I'll catch you in a couple of minutes, whether you like it or not."

"You can stay right where you are," she shot back. "I don't want you near me, anyhow."

As she rode away, Jane heard in an incredibly short time the clatter of hoofs beside her. She bristled inside.

"What are you chasing me for?" she demanded as Denison rode up and halted, with a jerk, at her side.

"I was afraid you'd fall off your horse," he retorted dryly. "Now skip the hard words," he countered easily as Jane angrily objected to his taunt and to his company. "You know you're used up; you don't know how to ride. You've used up your horse, and you don't know the country, and I've got to get you home, so turn around and follow me—do you know where you're heading for?"

"You Must Have Been Trying Not to Find Me," Said Jane Coldly.

She was too exasperated to speak.

"You're headed for the desert, and that's a poor place for a stranger to sleep in, night or day."

The fell warning checked Jane. She had heard stories about that awful desert; she had been warned to keep away from it. A revulsion of feeling swept over her. She was tired, tired enough to drop off her horse. Oppressed by a sense of loneliness, helplessness, and resentment at being ridiculed by a disagreeable stranger, her eyes filled with angry tears. She began to cry as she turned her horse's head to follow him.

"Hold on," he said kindly, "hold on. Nothing to cry about, not a thing. You're as safe as if you were in your bed at the ranch. I guess I'm pretty rough-spoken; but my bark's worse'n my bite. So you're from Chicago?"

"Yes."

"That's quite a burg, I understand."

"How far have we got to go to get home?"

"Considerable ways. If we could go as the crow flies, it wouldn't be so far. How long have you been out here?"

"Six weeks."

He was too polite to comment, though he had hardly need to ask the question—Jane was so evidently a tenderfoot.

"What's your name?" she asked in turn.

"Bill Denison."

"How long have you lived here?"

"Here and in the Panhandle most of my life."

"And how many years is that?"

"Nigh onto thirty years, I figure it

"What are you so sore for on everybody at Gunlock ranch?"

Could Jane have seen the expression of amazed despair on Denison's face, she would have felt she had reverted to an impossible subject.

"Lady," retorted her companion, "if I told you, you wouldn't believe it. But I don't say I'm sore at everybody. And I'm not sore at you. I'm glad there's one decent person now at Gunlock—"

Jane bridled again. "One decent person! I like that!"

"Hang it, I didn't mean to make another break. Please excuse, and I'll hog-tie my troublesome tongue."

"Is it very much farther?" asked Jane, alarmed now by approaching darkness.

"Not a whole lot. But maybe you'd better mount off and rest a little if you need to. It's rough going from here on, for I'm trying to take a short cut."

"You're not lost, are you?" she demanded suspiciously.

"Not yet."

"But you might get lost?"

"Not tonight. And if you'll stick to the saddle a little ways farther, you can have a drink at a spring to freshen you up."

"How can you find it?"

"If you'd drunk from it as many times as I have, you could find it in a sandstorm, blindfolded—so could these horses, either of 'em."

The two were silent for a while. Presently Denison checked his horse. "Here's your spring, lady. Are you thirsty?"

"Choked. If you hadn't been so mean, I'd have asked you for a drink at your house—if it is your house."

"It's mine so far, but there's a hangover lawsuit of Van Tambel's on it. Can you get down, lady?"

"I don't know whether I can or not. I've been in this saddle so long."

Her companion eased her to the ground. Jane refused to drink without a cup till he told her to cup her hands. Then she would not drink until she could see there were no snakes in the water.

"Nothing gets into that water; it would freeze a snake to death. But I can strike a light so you can see the water in your hands."

He folded a piece of newspaper taken from one of his saddle pockets, lighted a match thinking his companion rather fussy, and when Jane had drunk, he drank and gave the horses a drink.

"I'd have offered you a drink at my house if I'd thought of it," he said, helping her to remount. "I didn't aim to be mean. You kind of took me by surprise. I'll admit I'm sore at Gunlock."

There were lights everywhere when Jane knocked, very late, at the ranch-house door. Kindly old Bull Page, one of the ranch hands, greeted her in the kitchen.

The girl was jaded to death. "Where's everybody, Bull?" she asked, dropping into a chair.

"Why, Miss Jane, they're all out lookin' for you."

"Looking for me!" exclaimed Jane scornfully. "Well, they must be loafing on the job. Where's Quong?"

"Quong's gone to bed, but I'll get some bacon and fried potatoes for you in no time," declared Bull. "Coffee?"

"Yes, and strong."

"Same as I take it. Well, well, how'd you manage to find your way home?"

"I didn't find it. I found a man and a cabin about a hundred miles from nowhere, and he brought me home. That coffee smells grand, Bull," sighed Jane. "Hurry up with the bacon!"

As she said the words, in stalked the ranch foreman, Dave McCrossen.

At the sight of the missing girl he struck an attitude of resentful astonishment. "Hell's bells, Jane!" he exclaimed. "Here you are home and we've been ridin' all over creation for you!"

"You must have been trying not to find me," said Jane coldly. Without much reason she resented the fact that she had got lost and not been promptly found.

"Where were you?" asked the foreman, sitting down.

"In the hills. You've always been telling me to ride where I pleased and that there was no danger because you'd pick me up. I guess your formula didn't work."

"I missed this time. There's never been any trouble locatin' you before. But it won't happen again. So you just wandered away and wandered home again?"

"I did not wander home. I was brought home."

"Who brought you?"

"Bill Denison."

If a cannon cracker had been exploded under McCrossen, it could not have been more sensational than her answer. He caught his breath with a gulp. "That fellow! Well, some things do beat the devil! Bull," he said, recollecting himself, "go out and tell the boys Jane is home. Bill Denison, was it?" he resumed, looking keenly at Jane.

"The name doesn't seem to sit very well with you," observed Jane crustily.

McCrossen looked disgruntled.

"That bird's name doesn't sit very well with anyone at Gunlock."

Jane seemed willing to pursue the subject. "Why not?" she asked languidly as she sipped her coffee.

"Why not? There's more reasons than one. Denison is a rustler, if you know what that means." He paused.

"What else?" she asked in the same fatigued manner.

"Go-to-School" Knits and Prints

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

DING-DONG goes the bell that sounds the knell of vacation as it rings in "first day of school." And again doting mothers are confronted with the problem of planning practical and as attractive as practical school wardrobes for the children of the household, for as every mother knows much of the poise and happiness of little girls in the classroom depend upon the feeling of self confidence which a pretty frock inspires.

To help in this matter of appareling little daughter to a nicety here are two suggestions we have to offer—knits and prints. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say crochets as well as knits for as much crocheting is being done these days as knitting. Simply a matter of choice. To emphasize the vogue for crochets and prints we are showing three as cunning classroom outfits as ever a fond mother might hope to include in a little girl's clothes collection.

See little Miss Twelve posing to the left in the picture arrayed in an ensemble that couldn't be prettier if it tried. It is crocheted in two shades of blue knit-cro-sheen. For the encouragement of would-be crocheters who feel the urge to copy this most attractive outfit we are telling you that the stitch is very simple and goes like lightning when once you get started. The skirt has gores of the lighter blue and the blouse hidden by the scarf is in matching light blue. It has a stylish high neck that closes with a drawstring. There are crochet buttons to add glamor to the occasion. The cutey-cute bag, the scarf and the hat are crocheted to match.

In a many-piece crocheted outfit as just described, the practical side of the question is self-evident. The blouse, the skirt and the jacket may be worn separately, which means that any number of changes are possible, being just what is a most needful virtue for school togs.

The simplicity and practicality of the blouse-and-skirt two-piece to the right is a big argument in its favor. This crocheted suit for the grammar school Miss is a real find when it comes to appropriate dress for play or for classroom. The blouse contrasts the dark skirt which is in keeping with the present style trend to bring out striking color effects. The wide sailor collar provides a nautical touch. The gay tassel tie gives a final flourish to this most attractive back-to-school dress which is so easily crocheted of mercerized knitting and crochet cotton. We almost forgot to mention the crowning glory of these crocheted garments — they wash perfectly and with as little trouble as a gingham, a pique or any wash fabric.

Picture for yourself little daughter clad in a cunning print such as the little girl centered in the picture is wearing. The grand thing about dresses made of the new prints this season is that it is perfectly safe to buy the correct size for no longer does one have to allow for shrinkage. That is, if the fabric is one of the newer prints that are sanforized shrunk. It means a great deal to know that little daughter's gay print frock will not shrink out of fit in tubbing.

SQUIRREL IN VOGUE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A pleasing topic of conversation among fur stylists and one that is creating no-end enthusiasm, is in regard to the revival of the ever beloved youthful-looking and wonderfully flattering gray squirrel. When you go fur-coat shopping keep this in mind and look for the charming squirrel models that are making so welcome a re-appearance. Perfect for sports and for more formal wear also, is the stunning double-duty coat pictured. It brings back squirrel worked in the striking new split skin fashion.

ALIX SCULPTURES CLOTHES TO FIGURE

Outstanding among silhouettes for fall are those drawn by Alix. Her dresses are fashioned to display every curve of a rounded, feminine form through masterly manipulation and drapery of soft, clinging fabric. This season, as last, her favorite is jersey, both silk and rayon.

Some of her skirts are so full and flaring that they resemble lampshades or parachutes, while others are caught under the hem like Turkish trousers. Fall coats are cut with a swirling flare.

Evening clothes, particularly, would delight an ancient Greek sculptor. Fullness is concentrated in groups of folds or gathers directly in front or back, not obscuring, but, rather, emphasizing, lovely curving outlines.

Borders of four or five bright colors emphasize the flare at the hem of many evening dresses.

Luxury and Elegance to Dominate Fall Costumes

Elegance and luxury will dominate the mode this autumn if the costumes already appearing are any criterion. Magnificent fabrics, beautifully cut on exquisite lines, is the recipe for late afternoon and informal and formal evening clothes. Typical of this trend is a white dinner ensemble with a long slim skirt of white and silver blistered crepe and a simple surplice bodice of plain silver metal cloth. The shoulders, with double puffs and the tailored lapel collar, are smart notes on the short jacket that is fitted in back and open in front.

Motorist's Buttons

Among the novelty buttons that have made their appearance are those that carry the various road signs for motorists.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

COUNTING THE WEEKS.

It is just about seven weeks now before election and the flame of excitement is spreading like a prarie fire. This will be the nation's 21st presidential election. The Republicans have, during that time, won 14 victories and lost six. This year is an exception for political excitement as well as being an expensive election, or rather an expensive campaign. The G.O.P. sets as its goal, a campaign fund of $3,000,000 while the Democrats are to spend $2,000,000

Five million dollars is a lot of money these times; however, approximately 40,000,000 voters went to the polls in 1932 and 60,000,000 may reasonably be expected to vote in 1936. Hence, this expenditure is scarcely eight cents per voter, which might be considered a very cheap estimate for a vote. In the past both parties have depended largely on big contributions from wealthy men and large business firms. One sad part of an expensive campaign is, that fighting for party preference and victory, instead of a choice of a real leader!

Barring our own great and leading nation, the world is hungry for leadership. The outside world never has had enough able men who know where they are going and how to get there. The people of the world at large have seemingly been like sheep without a shepherd. The world war was brought about by a lack of leadership among diplomats; it was prolonged unnecessarily by lack of leadership among generals, none of whom was big enough for the job; and the Treaty of Versailles is a monument to the incompetence of statesmen who settled upon the alleged brutality of unjust "peace". And today one might find few leaders in political life, were we to listen to a discriminating public. Thus, in these confused and chaotic days, we are to elect a president of the United States!—In our opinion it should be Franklin D. Roosevelt!

OUR NATIONAL CONSTITUTION

Yesterday, Thursday, the Constitution of the United States is 149 years old! Hence "Constitutional Day." In many respects the Constitution is the greatest instrument of representative government. There was never a time in our national history when a study of the Constitution was so essential for passing judgment on a political situation. History records no cleaner concept of a workable popular government than the purposes of the Constitution as set forth in its preamble.

The Constitution of the United States is probably the ablest state document ever written, whose purpose was the foundation and maintenance of a stable national government. It seems almost a miracle that such a constitution could have been devised and quite miraculous that it could have been adopted. The articles of confederation had failed; and the convention of 1787 that made and adopted the Constiitution was filled with men of such different views that the final agreement was the result of many compromises.

There were times when it seemed impossible that the delegates could agree; and when on September 17, 1787, it was at last adopted, many thought that it could never be ratified. When the work was all over Washington sat with bowed head in great gratitude; the members then, with the same spirit, came forward to sign the document.

The Bureau of Printing at Washington, D.C., is busy these days issuing new memorial postage stamps, being portraits of distinguished people and it is a harvest for the stamp collectors. The latest stamp to be issued is for Susan B. Anthony, the mother of "Women's Suffrage," which was made the 19th Amendment of the Constitution, giving woman the right to vote. It is the first stamp to bear the likeness of a woman since Martha Washington in 1922, and is a most beautiful piece of the engraver's art. Miss Anthony first waged her fight for woman's rights in 1852 and she fought diligently until she won out, dying at the age of 86 years. Other memorial stamps to appear is a series of generals in different armies. George Washington and Nathaniel Greene on the one-cent; Andrew Jackson and Winfield Scott on the 2-cent. Others appearing are Grant, Sherman, Lee, and Andrew Jackson. The naval series will have the faces of John Paul Jones, John Barry, Thomas McDonough, Stephen Decatur, David Farragut, David Porter, George Dewey, W. T. Thompson and W. S. Schley.

Since on the 23rd, the sun crosses the equator and marks the end of summer aand the beginning of autumn, the change that is taking place in September canopy of stars is to be expected. Summer constellations are passing out with summer season gone and new stars will twinkle with brilliance. "Daylight Saving time" will also soon end. There are now 17 states operating on the plan, and 31 states which failed to recognize it, or were too stubborn to adopt it; California included.

Little do we know what ill-conduct of secret agencies mean. Russia has a typical example. Russia last August asked the expulsion of Leon Trotsky, a former chief of the Red Army and now an exile, who with his wife are interned in Norway, on the proviso that he would not conduct any counter-revolutionary activities in Russia or any other country. He denies having anything to do with an anti-Stalin terrorist plot. As a political refugee he is declared to be in safe hands at last. The demand of the soviet union that the Norway Cabinet expel him, is a scheme to sieze on him. There is very certain evidence that Norway authorities will hold Trotzky permanently in spite of Moscow protests. This Russian communist has been a firm fighter and orator for his cause. In 1900 he was banished for participating in a revolutionary labor movement in Russia. He came to United States in 1917 and was editor of a Russian socialist paper. He became a dangerous Bolshevist advocate, and later minister of foreign affairs. As an ardent proclaimer of his views, he became first "censured" by the Government and finally expelled and exiled in 1929.

Letter To News Says Chain Store Tax Unfair

CALIFORNIA CHAIN STORES Association
San Francisco,
September 5, 1936

H. H. Hartvigsen
News
Ocean Beach, Calif.
Dear Mr. Hartvigsen:

Now that the primaries are over, the Chain Stores of California feel that this may be the right time to offer you and your readers a fair statement of some of the underlying issues presented by the proposed special chain store tax. Soon your columns will be besieged by all manner of political news. We should like to make this brief statement to you before the great stampede is on!

Starting about twenty years ago with the demand to "eliminate the middleman," "reduce the high cost of living," and "narrow the spread between producer and consumer," chain stores have developed rapidly in response to an economic need. They eliminate in-between expenses and get merchandise from the manufacturer or farmer to the consumer by the most direct route and at the lowest possible cost.

Now, any new development of this kind must necessarily make the competition keener for some of the old established lines of business. Thus, the chain store method has naturally crowded jobbers who are their real opponents. The jobbers and middlemen have persuaded some of the independent merchants that the chains are doing them an injury and may eventually put them out of business. Statistics show this is not true. But by legislation and taxation those whose toes have been stepped on by the chains are trying to restore the conditions of 1910 and 1915, even though such a thing is impossible and undesirable.

We have all kinds of laws and taxes to curb the chain stores. These are really efforts to penalize efficiency and to shackle the chain stores so that they will have to go out of business or raise prices to the public. If some or all the stores are put out of business, then the independents can raise their prices to the consumer, or if the chain stores stay in business they will have to increase prices and pass the taxes on to the public. In either case it will be the consumer who will pay.

Back in 1870 we had a similar situation when independent merchants and middlemen made a crusade against the mail order houses and the department stores and tried to make the public feel that they would put independent merchants out of business. This never happened and the crusade died a natural death. The same thing is now going on against chain stores.

The nub of the matter is that a selfish battle is going on between an old and a new form of distribution—the middleman and certain independents on the one hand against the chain stores on the other. The discouraging thing is that consumers may not realize in time that the public will really pay the tax. Unfortunately, consumers are not organized.

Of course, there are many serious faults to be found with the proposed tax. To begin with, it is not a revenue measure. Its sponsors have called it a "weapon," designed to curb chain stores. Next, it is pock-marked with discrimination. It taxes a small neighborhood store $500 and a huge department store or super-market $1. It taxes one type of chain $500 and completely exempts other chains that are direct competitors. It establishes a new principle of taxation that may lead to indiscriminate attacks on business, resulting in still further increases in the cost of living.

Briefly, our view is that chain stores, by lowering the cost of living, have raised the standard of living. They have enabled the people to save money on necessities with which to buy luxuries.

If we can only make the women of California see how the whole business may affect them, there will be no doubt about winning the fight against the California chain store tax.

The question is, will the voters see through the passionate cries of the middlemen and their befuddled allies, or will they be tricked by the good old emotional hokum—Washington, Lincoln, the Declaration of Independence and all the rest of the usual scenery?

Yours very truly,
W. M. BERG,
President,
California Chain Stores Association

POULTRY TO SELL? A WA... ad will find the buyer for you

VOTERS: Don't be fooled

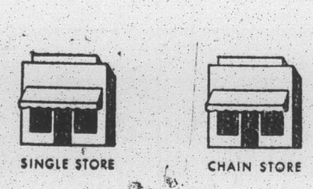
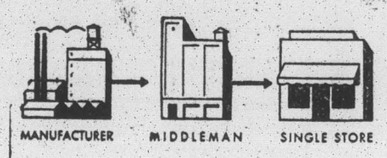
No matter what they call it...

22 IS A TAX ON YOU!

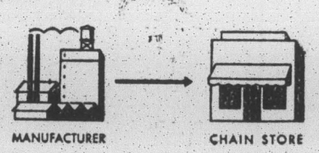
On the November 3rd Ballot there will appear as Proposition 22, an innocent looking measure called the "Retail Store License." But don't be misled. It's a 1936 model hidden tax...a new scheme to stifle competition and raise prices. This simple story of two stores explains the plot.



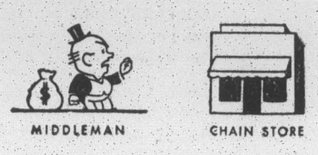
(1) Here are 2 California retail stores. On the outside they look much alike. Each does a good business. But one is a single store, the other has brothers and sisters and is called a chain store.



(2) The SINGLE store charges ten per cent higher prices, because it gives credit and delivery service and because it buys through a middleman.



(3) The CHAIN store charges ten per cent lower prices because it eliminates all frills, unnecessary services and in-between expenses and buys directly from producer or manufacturer.

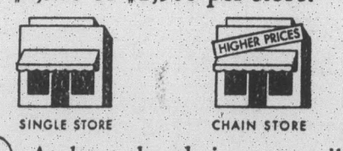


(4) You may remember, at one time the middleman sold goods to all retailers. That was when the high cost of living was our biggest headache. But today the chain store eliminates the middleman and the middleman's profits. So the middleman is opposed to chain stores (wouldn't you be—if you were a middleman?)

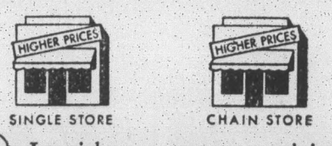
(5) The middleman realizes that people trade at a chain store chiefly because it sells for 10 per cent less. Since he can't compete with the chain store method, the middleman wants to put chain stores out of business or force them to raise their prices.

(6) Through the California Legislature he lobbies a bill called the "Retail Store License." This unfair bill would levy a special tax of $1.00 a year on single stores and $500.00 a year on chain stores.

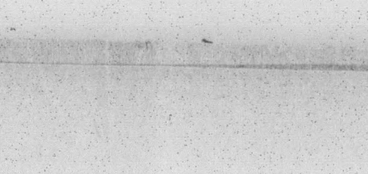
(7) That, he figures, may put the chain store out of business so its customers will be forced to pay the higher prices at the single store. If not, the tax can be raised later to $1,500 or $2,500 per store.



(8) At least the chain store will be forced immediately to raise its prices and thus lose business.

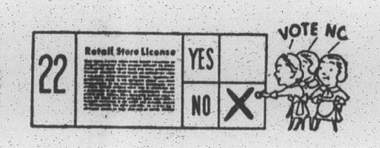


(9) In either case competition will be less. So the single store can raise its prices and still get more business. This means fatter profits for the middleman who sells to the single store.



(10) Of course the public will pay for these profits through an increase in prices on the necessities of life. But it's just a question of whether the middleman or the public takes the rap.

(11) Who would suspect that an innocent thing like a Retail Store License was another scheme to tax the public and fatten the middleman's pocketbook? Voters might think it was some trifle like a dog license or a fishing license!



(12) But wait. Some of the public did suspect. Shortly after this hidden-tax bill passed the Legislature, 136,000 indignant California voters signed a petition that put it on the ballot at the next general election. Now the voters can say a word for themselves. We think that word will be "NO."

(13) So what it all adds up to is this: the innocent sounding Retail Store License is a scheme to subsidize the single store and wholesaler by taxing the public. 22 is a tax on you. Vote NO on Proposition 22.

22 IS A TAX ON YOU!

VOTE NO NOVEMBER 3 ON PROPOSITION 22

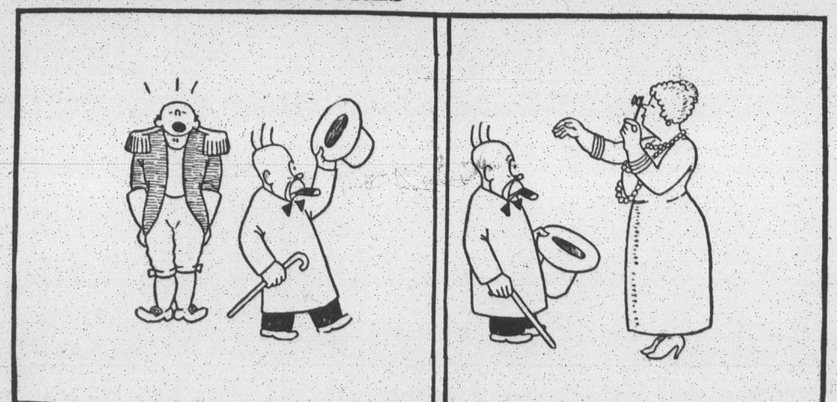
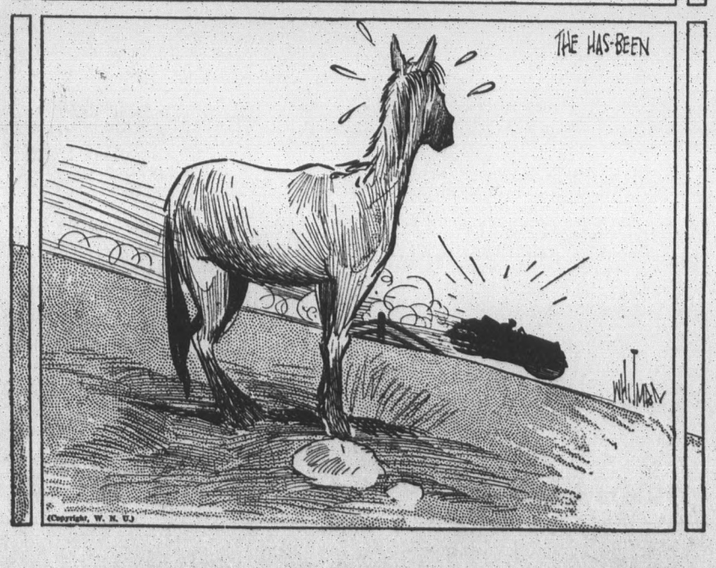
ADAMSON'S ADVENTURES



Going High-Hat By O. JACOBSSON

The Curse of Progress



Caveman Style

A woman who was having a house built detected one of the bricklayers halving the bricks with his trowel. With a triumphant gleam in her eyes she approached him swiftly and said: "Isn't that rather a primitive way of cutting a brick in half?"

The man looked up, smiled and said: 'Lor' bless yer dear heart, lidy, there's a far more primitive way than this, believe me."

"Really, and what's that?" she inquired.

"Biting it, lidy, biting it."

Useless Clock

Pat always was late for work, and the foreman advised him to buy an alarm clock. The Irishman did so, but still he continued to put in a belated appearance at his job.

"Why can't you turn up at the right time, Pat, now you've got an alarm clock?" asked the foreman.

"Bedad," replied Pat, "it's no good; it goes off when I'm asleep."—Exchange.

TWO PLUS THREE

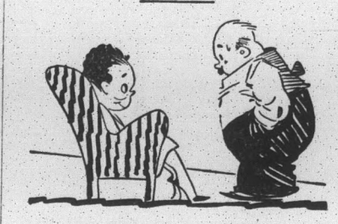
Arthur, who was five years old, was being drilled in simple arithmetic by his teacher, who said: "If I put five sweets in your hand and you eat two of them, how many would you have then?"

"Five," replied Arthur.

"But," said the teacher, "how can that be true when you have eaten two?"

"Sure," replied Arthur. "Two on the inside and three on the outside."—Lewiston Journal.

TURN OVER



"A fellow threatened today to put me to sleep."

"I am glad that he didn't do it, you do snore so."

Over His Head

It was one of the early matches of the season, on the ground on which the grass was, if anything, a little too plentiful. The diminutive but self-important referee had been giving little satisfaction.

A number of somewhat inexplicable decisions had been endured patiently, when, finally, a voice inquired in very penetrating accents: "Why don't they cut the grass so that the referee can see the game?"

Woman's Intuition

"My dear," remarked Jones, who had just finished reading a book on "The Wonders of Nature," "this is really a remarkable book. Nature is marvelous! Stupendous! When I read a book like this, it makes me think how puerile, how insignificant is man."

"Huh!" smiled his better half, "a woman doesn't have to wade through 400 pages of a book to discover that!"—Santa Fe Magazine.

Don't Stop

"Let me kiss those tears away, sweetheart," Jimmie begged, tenderly. She fell into his arms and he was very busy for some moments. But the tears flowed on. "Can nothing stop them?" he asked breathlessly.

"No," said Frances; "it's hay fever; but go on with the treatment."—Pathfinder Magazine.

Starting Young

The teacher was testing the knowledge of a kindergarten class. Clapping a half-dollar on the desk, she said sharply:

"What is that?"

Instantly, a voice from the back row: "Tails."

A Real Reformatory

Mother—You good for nothing! Why not take a pattern from your father?

Son—What has he done?

Mother—Why he has just got two years off his sentence for good conduct.

SOME IDEA

"What's your idea of bliss, Bill?"

"Plenty of worms, and no air rifles!"

A Familiar Noise With Him

Bacheller—Are you ever troubled with roaring in your ears at night?

Daddi—Well, I should say so! But if it gets too bad, I get up and walk the floor with him till he quiets down.—Baltimore Evening Sun.

Startled

"I turned the way I signalled," said the lady, indignantly, after the crash.

"I know it," retorted the man. "That's what fooled me."

Diffidence

"Have you ever thought of making campaign speeches?"

"No," answered Miss Cayenne. "I haven't had enough luck charming men one at a time to think of trying to make a hit with a crowd."

On His Way

"Oh, Mr. Policeman, a man has been following me."

"Are you sure he was following you?"

"Yes, I went back two or three times to see if he was coming."

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

THE ANGRY TRAPPER

JERRY MUSKRAT had about decided that Farmer Brown's Boy wasn't coming back when he heard footsteps and a moment later Farmer Brown's Boy appeared coming down the Laughing Brook toward the Smiling Pool. Jerry remained hidden where he could not be seen, but where he himself could see all that went on around the Smiling Pool.

In one hand Farmer Brown's Boy carried a bunch of things that clanked as he walked. Jerry knew what they were. He would know those things as far as he could see them. They were steel traps. Jerry scowled as he saw them. The sound of them hitting together sent little cold shivers over him. They were dreadful things, even more dreadful than terrible guns. There was nothing to fear from the latter save when they were in the hands of hunters, and any one with his wits about him ought to be able to see a hunter in time to seek safety.

But these dreadful traps were left hidden in the very places where a fellow had the right to feel safest, ready to seize him in cruel steel jaws and hold him to suffer pain and dreadful fright for hours and hours, sometimes for days. Jerry could think of nothing so dreadful as those steel traps, and so he shivered at the sight of them.

Farmer Brown's Boy threw the traps down on the bank of the Smiling Pool. His usually sunny face was clouded. From his pocket he took a piece of paper and a pencil. Then he sat down and began to write. When he had finished he went over to Jerry's favorite log and thrust a stick in the bank just above it. The top of the stick was split, and in this he slipped the piece of paper. Then he went back, gathered up the traps, slung them over his shoulder and tramped off in the direction of home.

All the rest of that day Jerry kept an eye on that piece of paper at the end of his favorite old log. It puzzled him. He didn't go near it. He didn't dare to. He was suspicious of it. It might be some new kind of trap. Jerry was very unhappy. Early the next morning Jerry heard some one coming down the Laughing Brook. He promptly hid where he could watch. In a few minutes the stranger whom he had one time thought his friend appeared, and it was plain to be seen that he was very angry. He was muttering as he strode along. Almost at once he saw the piece of paper left by Farmer Brown's Boy. He strode over to it, picked it up, and read it. This is what was on it:

"No trapping or hunting is allowed on this property. You, whoever you are, can get your traps at Farmer Brown's house."

The trapper turned and shook his fist in the direction of Farmer Brown's. Then, still muttering, he walked away hurriedly, but not in the direction of Farmer Brown's. Jerry didn't understand it at all, but for some unknown reason he felt better.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

CULINARY THOUGHTS

IT IS just a matter of taste, of course, the kinds of foods we like; tomatoes we all admit are one of our choice vegetables, rich in vitamins and adding attractiveness to any dish by their rich color, but are we not overdoing the tomato sauce business? It is served over all kinds of meat, fish and fowl, as spanish rice, pilaf, creole sauce goulash, hungarian, and otherwise, until the sight of tomato on spaghetti, macaroni and noodles makes us wish we could get back for a while at least to the days of our grandmothers when the tomato was simply an ornament and considered poisonous to eat.

We have too many mixtures in our diets. A sliced ripe tomato served fresh and natural is a thing of beauty and a joy forever, but when we put it into all sorts of mixtures they become a mess. A few such dishes once in a great while might be really enjoyed, but served too often we lose all respect for the delightful vegetable.

Recently on the bill of fare in a famous restaurant we ordered "Old-fashioned Beef Stew." There were visions of brown juicy meat with the accompanying brown gravy, but when it appeared there were large cubes of beef floating in rivers of tomato sauce; imagine a stew called old-fashioned, served thus.

When we disguise the dish we are serving by any sauce too highly seasoned or flavored, we are guilty of a grave dietary error. When we eat potatoes, we want to have them taste like potatoes; meats should always have their own distinctive flavor paramount, and so should it be in all main dishes.

Home of Wild Sheep

Wild sheep of many species occupy mountains in most of Asia, Southern Europe and Northern Africa. Asia has by far the greatest number of species and individuals, and scientists believe it to be the region where wild sheep originated. They must have been fairly early migrants to North America, however, probably crossing from Siberia to Alaska long before the first human beings to populate the New World came over by the same route.

With Long Ruffle

An elongated ruffle which extends from around the neck down to the hem of the skirt trims Ginger Rogers' dress of gentian blue crepe printed with tiny bright blue squares. Her accessories are cream-colored. She wears a Lily Dache hat which, in design, is newer than next week. The brim is tied up by means of a blue cord which matches the net that forms the crown.

GIRLIGAGS

"Most women think life is a Marry-go-round," says Reno Ritzi, "and the game is to see how many rings they can snatch."

PITY THE POOR

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

Pity the poor—
An oak they see,
And yet they but
Behold a tree.

Pity the poor,
When buds unclose,
Who see a flow'r
And not a rose.

Pity the poor,
Who sell, who lend,
Make gold, but never
Make a friend.

Pity the poor,
Who come, who roam,
And have a house
And not a home.

Pity the poor,
Who know no loss,
No crown because
They know no cross.

Pity the poor—
Whate'er the need,
These are the poor,
The poor indeed.

THE PUZZLING KNOT

ASK a person to take a handkerchief by opposite corners. That done, request your friend to tie a knot in the handkerchief without releasing either corner.

The longer he attempts to tie the knot the more hopeless his task will become. Eventually, he will challenge you to perform the trick, whereupon you oblige.

Stretch the handkerchief and lay it on a table. Fold your arms, bend forward and grasp one end of the handkerchief between the fingers of your left hand; then shift and gain the other end with the fingers of your right.

Unfold your arms, holding the end of the handkerchief as you do so. A knot forms automatically in the center of the cloth.

Shirtwaister for School Girl

1959-B.

Here is the frock for juniors to make for school days. A combination of rhythm in its hemline, rhyme in its color scheme and racy in its style. For late summer wear, try tub silk, linen, cotton or shantung with long or short sleeves. For autumn and winter —"tweedy" silk crepe or broadcloth.

The waist, gathered slightly to the shoulder yoke front and back, has a center pleat and pockets for trimming. Buttons—a matter of choice. A small collar, tie, and belt complete this most effective frock. By way of suggestion, make the collar and cuffs in contrast, and detachable to be readily removed for laundering.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1959-B is available for sizes 8, 10, 12, 14 and 16. Size 12 requires two and three-eighths yards of 35-inch material with one-third yard of 35-inch contrasting material and one yard of ribbon for bow. With long sleeves it requires two and five-eighths yards.

Send for the Barbara Bell Fall Pattern Book containing 100 well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

VETERANS AND SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS SECURE NEW HOME

The recently organized branch No. eighty, Fleet Reserve association at Ocean Beach has completed negotiations with the Guardian Western company whereby the Fleet Reserve association, post 433 American Legion, Lt. Bert A. Allen post 2415 V.F.W. and their auxiliaries will occupy the former Sunset Market building at 4731 Point Loma Ave. Effective September 15, this building will become the new home of these organizations.

It is the intention of the three organizations to make their new home a popular spot in this community during the fall and winter by cooperating in a series of monthly card parties and social affairs. The first of which will be held in the new quarters Wednesday, September 23, under the sponsorship of the Fleet Reserve association. Each of the organizations will take turns in sponsoring the monthly affairs the proceeds from which will be used jointly toward the maintenance upkeep and furnishing of their newly acquired home. Tickets for the card party Sept. 23 will be sold by all of the organizations and any of their members can accomodate patrons desiring to attend.

Branch eighty promises that the prizes for this the first party will be of a grade and quality well worth the winning and will be a sample of those to follow at regular monthly intervals. Refreshments will be served. Reservations may be made in advance from any of the above named organizations or their members. It is hoped that the many card playing friends of these organizations will turn out for this their first joint card party in the new quarters. A good time is in store for those attending. In reply to inquiries it is announced that this building will be rented to others on open dates.

DESPONDENT WORLD WAR VETERAN SHOOTS SELF

William Joseph Kohler, 4676 Green street, a resident here for a number of years, Monday night shot himself while sitting in the family auto in his garage. He died early Tuesday morning at the county hospital.

Kohler is said to have suffered a good deal from war injuries and though he made an effort to add to the family income on PWA work he was unable to do so on account of his disability. He was reported as a quiet and conservative citizen and highly regarded by fellow veterans being a charter member of V.F.W. post 2415 of Ocean Beach.

Deceased was the beloved husband of Dorothy Kohler, father of Stanley Kohler of Ocean Beach, brother of Fred Kohler of Livermore, Calif.; Della Dietz and Louise Haight, Patterson, N. J., aged 49 years.

Funeral services were held at 4 p. m. yesterday at Bonham Bros., under auspices of V. F. W. post 2415, Fred Kraft, chaplain. Cremation.
